market potential both nationally and internationally.

Background:

Marine aquaculture or “mariculture” involves the cultivation of marine plants or animals, and in St Lucia to date has focused on the growing of marine algae (commonly called ‘seamoss’) on ropes in Praslin, Bois Chadon, Canelle and Laborie. Therefore, the scope for expansion and diversification within this sector is significant. In the Eastern Caribbean, there is still a strong demand for seamoss with good extract quality. However, there is a need to covert local seamoss farmers and processors to use the Eucheema cottonii so as to take advantage of advanced local markets and existing high demand markets overseas. The fisheries sector continues to provide important sources of income across St. Lucia and this project is expected to provide avenues for diversification and expansion of marine aquaculture in Saint Lucia.

Objectives of the assignment:

Conduct a feasibility study for expansion and diversification of mariculture in St. Lucia.

Collaboratively with seamoss farmers, Department of Fisheries staff and other interest groups/individuals to acquire, introduce and assess the cost of production and production potential of E. cottonii.

Assess and capitalise on value-added opportunities domestically and the export market potential of E. cottonii.

Provide training and capacity building to mariculture farmers, Department of Fisheries staff and other interest groups/individuals.

Assist in the revision and legislation for the regulation of mariculture practises in Saint Lucia.

Duration:

The project will commence from October 2012 to March 31, 2012.

Deliverables:

No. Deliverable

- 1 Work Plan
- 2 Comprehensive Feasibility Study
- 3 Cost of Production Study
- 4 Report on Production potential of E. cottonii
- 5 Report on value-added potential and export market potential
- 6 At least Four Training and capacity building workshops held
